

I believe the do not call list is a success and should not be changed from its current form. If companies want the right to contact existing customers with potential offers then they can petition customers with a release form that would give consent to call. Doing so would serve their purpose and avoid potential complaints to Consumer Affairs saving time and money for both. Having a do not call law has proven to be helpful to a large portion of New Jersey residents, why make it useless to protect residents from unwanted and unsolicited calls?
